PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

Administration Tools

Program Administration is your resource for a variety of programs, policies and forms to help you safely and smoothly administer your child care program.

Included in this section are editable forms and policies that give you a jump start on creating your own documents that reflect the unique nature of your program. For example, the Family Handbook is a working template for your center’s Family Handbook. Simply download it to your computer, edit it to reflect your program’s mission and policies, add a personal message, your own photos and logo and you can have a professional document in a fraction of the time it would take to create it from scratch.

Other Program Administration resources included in this section are business insurance, planning tools and volunteer management and more.
FAMILY HANDBOOK

Family Handbook
The Family Handbook gives you a big jump-start on creating your own program’s handbook. It is full of sample policies and procedures that you modify to reflect your program’s mission, goals and policies.

Simply download the handbook to your computer (It’s in Microsoft Word), edit it to reflect your own policies and practices, add photos, your logo, a personal message, whatever personal touches your wish to reflect the unique nature of your program. The comprehensive set of policies are there to jog your memory and give you a sample of the types of information you should include as you create your program’s own handbook.

Employee Discipline & Termination

As a supervisor, one of your most challenging responsibilities is knowing when and how to discipline and terminate an employee. This step-by-step guide helps you effectively navigate the confusing, intimidating path of discipline. Employee termination should rarely be a single action; it is generally a process, starting with the critical first step of trying to improve performance. Following the steps in the guide can help you reduce risks and negotiate a successful outcome.

- Employee Discipline & Termination Guide
- Employee Warning Notice Form
Employee Discipline & Termination Guidelines

Introduction
As a supervisor, one of your most challenging responsibilities is knowing when and how to discipline and terminate an employee. You can negotiate the confusing, intimidating path of discipline effectively and secure a successful outcome by following three fundamental principles: 1) employees deserve the opportunity to understand what is expected of them relative to performance and behavior; 2) employees benefit from being given an opportunity to change their behavior through a process known as “corrective action” and 3) when termination is necessary, the risk of a lawsuit is significantly reduced when the corrective action process is carefully documented in a written record.

Generally speaking, employee discipline should be progressive. Remember that the first objective should be to change the employee. Counseling does not produce the desired results, then the correct levels of discipline, eventually leading to termination.

Firing vs. Layoff
There is a difference between termination “for cause” (getting fired) and layoff (RIF). A termination for cause is based on performance issues. A layoff is due to budgetary or other organizational issues. Always check the criteria used in deciding which employee to lay off, you may have a problem employee and then hire someone else into the position.

Coaching vs. Corrective Action
All employees including high performers deserve guidance to help them achieve success in their jobs. No one is perfect.

The Corrective Action Process
Corrective action follows a series of steps that encourage an employee to modify his or her behavior. Each step in the progression grows more severe as the corrective/discipline process unfolds.

The steps in the corrective action process typically include:

- Step one: Verbal Counseling
- Step two: Written Warning Notice
- Step three: Second Written Warning Notice
- Step four: Termination

Some serious infractions warrant skipping one or more steps and immediately jumping to a higher step. Very serious infractions such as violence or theft may warrant termination as the first and only step. For serious infractions where a claim needs to be substantiated, it may be appropriate to suspend the employee with or without pay pending the outcome of an investigation.

If your organization chooses to write down your discipline policy and share it with employees, it is important to make sure that your policy states that you reserve the right to skip steps in appropriate cases, (like those described above.) The document should also state that the policy is not an employment contract in any way.

Verbal Counseling
Set up a time to meet one-on-one with the employee in a private setting such as an office or conference room. Clearly explain the purpose of the meeting:

- State the performance or behavior issue(s) and the impact.
- Present observations supported by specific examples.
- Provide the employee with the opportunity to respond.
- Identify action steps for improving performance or behavior.
INTERVIEW GUIDES

Interview Guides
Make sure you ask the right questions to get the skills and experience you seek. Learn how to “telephone screen” candidates and learn the basics of “behavioral interviewing” - a proven technique to help you uncover past behaviors as an indicator of future performance.

Here's how to use the guides:
1. Read the helpful hints on what to ask and not ask in an interview
2. Customize the guides to your job description
3. Record answers in the Phone Screen, Face-to-Face Interview, and Reference Check guides.

5 REASONS to Green Your Nonprofit

By now the phrase “Going Green” is familiar to most of us. Organizations large and small, regional and multinational, from nationwide networks to the local groups, have been “Going Green” for years. But what does “Going Green” mean? Why is it important? And why is it relevant to nonprofit organizations?

Environmental concerns have always been part of the public consciousness, but in recent years awareness has steadily grown for issues associated with an industrialized economy and environmental responsibility has become strategic to businesses, nonprofits, and governments.

Reason #1: Green Saves You Money

Threading Green makes common sense—reduce your organization’s impact on the environment while saving money. While some Green initiatives require upfront costs, such as purchasing more efficient computer equipment or installing compact fluorescent light bulbs, there are also many ways to reduce or reuse equipment contributing to lower costs without sacrificing quality. Reusing equipment, such as toner cartridges, can save companies up to 50% in waste costs as well as money. When you purchase used equipment, be sure to have it refurbished by a dealer who has been certified by a reputable organization.

Reason #2: Green Will Help You Attract the Best Employees!

According to a Green report this quarter, over 40% of organizational leaders said that environmental efforts are important in recruiting new employees.

Environmental Audit

Before embarking on your Green program, it is essential for your organization to understand the impact of its day-to-day work on the environment. Think about the environmental effects of everything you do, from the products you buy to the services you provide and the equipment you use. Each source of environmental impact presents a new opportunity for your organization to make different choices, and ensure that your business and environmental goals are aligned. With good information in hand, it’s easy to figure out how to move forward.

The best way to evaluate your organization’s environmental resources is by conducting an environmental audit. An environmental audit can be as basic as a group of employees walking through the office examining your facilities and equipment on a daily basis. It can be a professional assessment performed by an outside consultant or by your organization’s own Environmental Audit team. Either way, the audit results can help you improve your organization’s environmental impact.

10 TIPS for Greening Your Nonprofit

1. Conduct an Environmental Audit to Understand Your Environmental Profile

What is your organization’s current impact on the environment? Before you develop a Green plan or adopt any Green programs, conduct an Environmental Audit to assess how your organization uses resources. Use the audit to identify specific areas that should be targeted in your Green program. Tailoring a Green program to meet the individual needs of your organization will ensure the program’s success and produce results that are relevant for your specific needs.

2. Implement Energy-Saving Practices

Energy efficiency is a key area for saving money and reducing your environmental impact. Simple changes, such as turning off lights and computers when not in use, can make a big difference. Consider using energy-efficient lighting and equipment, and look for opportunities to purchase and sell energy credits.

3. Reduce, Reuse, and Recycle

Reduce waste by reusing materials and recycling. Encourage employees to recycle and compost. Look for ways to reduce waste generation, such as using digital files instead of paper, and consider using reusable containers for food and beverages.

4. Switch to Green Cleaning Products

Use environmentally friendly cleaning products that are free of harsh chemicals. Encourage the use of biodegradable and non-toxic products in your organization.

5. Promote Renewable Energy

Support renewable energy initiatives, such as wind or solar energy, which can help reduce your organization’s carbon footprint. Consider purchasing renewable energy certificates to offset the energy used by your organization.

6. Promote a Green Transportation Policy

Encourage employees to use low-emission vehicles or public transportation. Offer incentives for using alternative transportation methods, such as carpooling or cycling.

7. Implement a Waste Reduction Program

Develop a waste reduction program that encourages the proper disposal of waste. This can include waste reduction workshops, waste reduction goals, and regular waste audits.

8. Use Green Office Supplies

Choose environmentally friendly office supplies, such as recycled paper and ink cartridges. Encourage the use of digital documents and consider using electronic alternatives, such as video conferencing, for meetings.

9. Implement a Green Procurement Policy

Develop a Green Procurement Policy that encourages the purchase of environmentally friendly products and services. Consider using the principles of sustainable purchasing, such as reducing packaging and using renewable resources.

10. Promote Environmental Education

Educate employees and stakeholders about environmental issues and the importance of taking action. This can include organizing workshops and seminars, and providing resources for further learning.
